

My Language Arts Philosophy

The subject of Language Arts is one that continues to expand and show its importance in our world today. And while I have always enjoyed the subject itself, I have come to the conclusion that there is much more to the teaching of Language Arts than one may think. Like anything, this subject is one whose mastery is a constant process. With this in mind, I hope to always be open minded to and yearning for more effective and interesting methods of teaching it. I hope to ready each of my students to be stronger in this area than they were when entering my class on the first day of school, as well as to help them see the purpose of Language Arts in our everyday lives. I will strive to challenge them in ways that will help them find what they are capable of, and in turn, be proud of what they found. In essence, I hope to help each child become better communicators and improve in the skills that are necessary to do so. I will always aim to show my students that, regardless of if they choose it as their favorite subject, there can always be a way to find relevance, importance, and interest in the areas of Language Arts.